

PROJECT SPIDERS

School-University Partnerships Influencing aDvocacy and Engaging Rural Special educators

EARN A
DOCTORAL DEGREE

MAKE A DIFFERENCE IN SPECIAL EDUCATION

LIMITED SCHOLARSHIPS
AVAILABLE

This scholarship program for doctoral students is a partnership between the University of Oklahoma, University of Louisville and the University of North Florida for those dedicated to special education, are interested in becoming an educational leader and have a desire to support teachers in rural settings.

Project SPIDERS Provides

- Tuition and fees for four years of study
- $15,000 yearly stipend for four years of study
- $7,000 to support research activities
- Yearly conference travel for four years of study
- Mentorship and support from experts in rural education from three leading universities
- Opportunities to complete advanced research, policy and professional development training and internships

Interested? Apply!

1. Visit our website
2. Complete a 6-question interest survey
3. Apply to any of the 3 participating Universities' doctoral programs.

Eligibility

- SPIDERS scholars are working professionals interested in enhancing their research, professional development, and policy skills
- A Master of Special Education, or closely related field, degree
- Interest in conducting applied rural research, rural policy development, and effective rural professional development and training practices
- Strong commitment to enhancing rural special education
- Admission to the Doctorate of Special Education degree program at either the University of Oklahoma, University of Louisville or the University of North Florida

Contact Us

University of Louisville

Dr. Ginevra Courtade, g.courtade@louisville.edu

University of North Florida

Dr. David Hoppey, david.hoppey@unf.edu

University of Oklahoma

Dr. Brittany Hott, bhott@ou.edu

Office of Special Education Programs
U.S. Department of Education

HTTPS://BIT.LY/PROJECTSPIDERS